Remember, chess is 50% you and 50% your opponent. I've seen several players who just focus on what they're doing and don't even look at what their opponent is trying to do. Whenever your opponent makes a move and before you make your move, a good idea is just to stop and ask in your mind, "what does their move do?" This approach, simply keeps you more on the look out for your opponent's threats. Are they attacking my knight, or my bishop? Am I about to get checkmated? Many times your opponent won't be threatening such things, but if they are, you now have a better chance of spotting their attacks!
