COACHJOKES: Q: Why can you never play chess in the jungle?

Chess Players in Focus 2#: TACTICAL TIPS + TRICKS: Johannes Zukertort- See Magic Mini

Hi guys. For this RNF on chess personalities, I thought we'd look at the super attacking genius Johannes Zukertort (1842-1888). Zukertort himself was a Polish chess master, who finished one of the World's first master chess tournaments (held in 1883) in first place, that is, even ahead of the first world chess champion Willhelm Steinitz who finished second. Zukertort did also challenge Steinitz in 1886 for the first World Championship title which he lost. What we can learn from the chess games of Zukertort is an understanding that the most important thing in a game (apart from having fun of course as the most important), but the 2nd most important thing is checkmate. Even above winning and losing pieces checkmate wins the game. Zukertort would often give up several of his pieces, to trap his opponents King, taking away its running squares and then attack it to mate. See example in
